PRIVACY & SECURITY

Regardless of which platform you use, security and privacy during video conferencing are concerns you should not overlook. This has been true from the early days of ISDN/IP video conferencing and exist through the multitude of options that exist today. While Zoom has received the bulk of the criticism, of which they have been incredibly responsive, these same security issues are not unique to any platform. Famously, during the Trayvon Martin trial, the Skype meeting address got out to the public and the courtroom was bombarded with people calling into the meeting which eventually put a halt to the witness' testimony.

From our very first remote trial testimony, we have included many of the same precautions that we do today to ensure secure and private remote testimony. To the left are seven steps we are taking to keep your remote deposition secure and private.

BE PREPARED

There are five easy steps you can take to ensure your remote deposition goes as smoothly as possible.

- Ensure you have the proper equipment including a webcam, microphone, and proper internet bandwidth.
- Conduct a test call to confirm everything works beforehand.
- Look at your surroundings and make sure they are appropriate, clean, and organized.
- Consider your local rules regarding remote depositions. You may need to stipulate to the witness being sworn in remotely.
- Consider how you will handle exhibits. All web conferencing software allows you to share your screen with other parties.
